The Church Inn

Birmingham

:: Installation requirements

The Church Inn boasts a distinctive roof terrace that overlooks its surroundings where patrons can dine alfresco or enjoy a leisurely drink. It was decided a concrete substrate did not match the clients requirements as they were after a more vibrant finish. As part of the refurbishment the client was looking for a slip resistant yet aesthetically pleasing outdoor seating area that was in keeping with the rest of the "New Orleans" inspired pub.

:: Why National Flooring?

Birmingham based Interior Designer Newman Gauge had previously worked with The National Flooring Company on numerous projects within the leisure industry. Having seen the benefits that The National Flooring Company could provide they recommended their services to Wedgewood Construction the contractor responsible for overseeing the whole project.

It was decided that a system from Degafloor, which was designed to be installed externally, would be the ideal solution.

The cold applied resin system offers outstanding durability and flexibility. It guarantees to chemically bond to the existing substrate to create a watertight bonded finish ensuring that excess water is not released to the areas below. A fleece membrane was installed to the floor and the upstands prior to the resin application to help reinforce the substrate and assist with the impermeable finish.

The main body of the resin was broadcast with a mix of red, white and black coloured aggregates to create a slip resistant finish. The textured finish will maintain its slip resistant properties even in wet conditions ensuring the area is fully compliant with health and safety standards.

The re-opening weekend attracted many customers, due to the nice weather people could sit outside in the terrace area and enjoy the views.
